ABSTRACT

This study, using the Neulinger and Breit (1971) leisure attitude questionnaire, surveyed 129 community-based persons having a mean age of 71. Ninety-three of these persons were employed by and assumed responsibilities in the Foster Grandparent program at the local state school for the mentally retarded, while the other 36 respondents were members of a local chapter of the American Association of Retired Persons. The original Neulinger and Breit questionnaire was modified for administration to the elderly, in accordance with difficulties evidenced in a pilot study of this instrument's application with the elderly. The data were factor analyzed using a principle component method and a varimax rotation to five factors being in good agreement with the findings of Neulinger and Breit (1969, 1971) and were so named; Amount of Work or Vocation Desired; Amount of Perceived Leisure; Self-Definition through Leisure or Work; Affinity for Leisure; and Society's Role in Leisure Planning. In comparing both groups' responses to the items which comprise these five leisure attitude dimensions, the latter group evidenced a stronger self-definition oriented toward work rather than leisure. It is recommended that the usage of the schedule be restricted to research. (Author)

The leisure of persons within post - industrial, technological societies has been seen as a major social problem due to a shorter work week and earlier retirement. The change of leisure from goal to problem has been paralleled by a change in the meaning of leisure. Leisure once meant a way of life and a state of being. Today leisure is generally defined in opposition to work and as residual time. A resolution of a United Nation's conference held in Geneva in 1970 has declared leisure to be the right of all peoples. However for the elderly retiree the role of "being at leisure" has been seen as an added dimension to the already burdensome "roleless role" of being elderly.

Studies of leisure and the elderly may be classified according to Meyer-sohn's (1969) description into research measuring leisure activities (Hoar, 1961), expenditures of time and money (Pfeiffer and Davis, 1971), and the meaning of leisure (Donald and Havighurst, 1959). Studies of leisure and the elderly have not been conducted in the area of leisure attitudes which Neulinger (1974, p. 52) defines as a "particular way of thinking about, feeling about, and acting toward or in regard to leisure." Drawing upon the pioneering work of Neulinger (Neulinger and Breit, 1969, 1971; Neulinger and Raps, 1972) in the psychology of leisure, this research into the dimension of leisure as attitude should complement the currently existing research in the area of leisure and aging.

Purpose

The purpose of this study was to ascertain the leisure attitudes of a sample of community-based elderly in an attempt to determine items suitable for inclusion in an elderly leisure attitude schedule.

Procedure

A modified version (Appendix A) of the leisure attitude questionnaire of Neulinger and Breit (1971) was administered to a sample of 129 community based elderly ages 58-84 with a mean age of 71. The original Neulinger and Breit questionnaire (Appendix B) was modified because the results of a pilot study determined the major criticisms of the questionnaire for administration to the elderly to be length, clarity of directions, complexity of nine paragraph ranking (p.7) describing free time activities and phrased in terms of Murray's press variables (Murray, 1938), and semantic differentials on leisure (p.8) and work (p.9) based on Osgood et al., 1957. A factor analysis of the 26 items was carried out using a principle component method and a Varimax rotation to five factors. Only those items were used to define factors that had loadings of at least .30 and .10 larger on the respective factor than on any other factor. One item (15) was thus excluded as a factor definer because it had a loading of less than .30, and one item (3) because it was tied on two factors by a difference of less than .10.

Results

The following are descriptions of the five factors contained in Appendix C.

Factor 1-- Amount of Work or Vacation Desired

This factor relates to a person's work and leisure ethics in a very concrete way, i.e. How much of a person's time should be spent at work and how much on vacation.

Factor 2-- Amount of Perceived Leisure

This factor is concerned with a person's perceived leisure and his satisfaction with the amount of leisure he has. It shows the person who always has more things to do than he has time for.

Factor 3-- Self-Definition Through Leisure or Work

This factor is involved with the degree to which leisure and work are the means by which a person expresses himself and finds satisfaction. It is thus concerned with the relative importance of work and leisure as personal definers.

Factor 4-- Affinity For Leisure

This factor addresses itself to a person's desire for leisure as expressed for his children and himself, and his perceived capacity for leisure as well as guilt about having leisure.

Factor 5-- Society's Role in Leisure Planning

This factor relates to a wide range of leisure activities and the societal position toward supporting and regulating men's leisure.

Discussion

A factor analysis of the twenty-six items to five factors yielded factors which were in very good agreement with the findings of Neulinger and Breit (1969, 1971) and so the factor names that they used were retained. This basic agreement should be expected since, of the 129 community based older persons studied, 93 were active members of the Foster Grandparent program at the local state school for the mentally retarded. They were currently employed and assuming major responsibility for the care of institutionalized mentally retarded persons. When asked about their leisure in relation to their work, the Foster Grandparents had little difficulty responding. On the other hand, 36 respondents were members of a local chapter of the American Association of Retired Persons and they did have difficulty responding because they were not currently employed. Work for these retired persons was engagement in subsistence activities such as shopping and housekeeping. Such self-definitions of work are indicative of the need for further research into retired older persons' perceptions of work, particularly when leisure and work are studied as related concepts.

The position of this group of older persons on these five factored leisure attitude dimensions may be gained from an inspection of the mean values of the individual items, since the grouped items forming these basic dimensions lack meaning other than that contained in the items which make up each factor. This group's dominant orientation is toward work, with less desire for a shorter work week and more vacation. There is moderate agreement on the need for more leisure with the recognition that there always seems to be more things to do than there is time for, and, even if there is free time, it may not really be leisure. Self-definition is oriented toward work rather than leisure with this group of older persons' feeling that their talents are better expressed on the job rather than in leisure activities. They do not like a life of leisure and would not want it for themselves or for their children. Society is seen as having a role to play in leisure planning with the strongest encouragement being in the area of mental endeavors and productive efforts like hobbies.

It thus appears that this attitude schedule can identify relatively stable and independent attitude dimensions in the leisure domain. However, it is recommended that usage of this schedule be restricted to research using better educated older subjects. If the schedule is to be used for clinical purposes it is recommended that item wording be generally changed in order to reflect the lower educational level of most older persons.

Summary

Research concerning leisure and aging has focused on studies of leisure activities, expenditures of time and money, and the meaning of leisure but not on leisure attitudes. This study, using the Neulinger and Breit (1971) leisure attitude questionnaire, studied 129 community based older persons having a mean age of 71. The data were factor analyzed using a principle component method and a Varimax rotation to five factors with the resulting five factors being in very good agreement with the findings of Neulinger and Breit (1969, 1971) and were so named: Amount of Work or Vacation Desired; Amount of Perceived Leisure; Self-Definition Through Leisure or Work; Affinity for Leisure; and Society's Role in Leisure Planning. It is recommended that usage of the schedule be restricted to research.

- (10) Place a check next to the statement below that best describes the society in which you would want your children to live in.

(37)

- ☐ a society where everyone has a life of leisure
- ☐ a society where the emphasis is on leisure
- ☐ a society where the life of work and leisure are balanced
- ☐ a society where the emphasis is on work
- ☐ a society where everyone has a life of work

- (11) If you were to divide your time into two parts: one work time and the other free time -- how much time would you want for each?

Let the bar below represent your time. Draw a line dividing the bar according to the way you would divide your time between work time and free time. Label the work part "W" and the free time part "F".

- (12) Below are seven statements which describe different positions society could take regarding a person's free time. First, read all statements and then indicate by a check mark the one statement with which you agree most.

(40)

- ☐ society should prohibit certain free time activities and prescribe certain others
- ☐ society should prohibit certain free time activities
- ☐ society should encourage certain free time activities and discourage certain others
- ☐ society should discourage certain free time activities
- ☐ society should encourage certain free time activities
- ☐ society should make available information about free time activities but not actively encourage or discourage what a person does in his free time
- ☐ what a person does in his free time is none of society's concern

- (13) Check the statement below which best describes you:

(41)

- ☐ my leisure time is always filled with thousands of things I want to do
- ☐ I usually have no trouble finding things to do during my leisure time
- ☐ I sometimes do not know what to do in my leisure time
- ☐ I usually do not know what to do in my leisure time

- ☐ I usually feel quite bored during my leisure time
- ☐ I always feel quite bored during my leisure time

- (14) Below are nine paragraphs each describing a particular kind of free time activity.

First, read all nine paragraphs.

Then, rank them in order of your preference, from 1 to 9. Start by placing a 1 next to the activity you like most; then place a 9 next to the one you like least. Continue in this manner until you have ranked all paragraphs, that is, assign a 2 to the activity you like second best, and an 8 to the activity you like second least, and so on.

FREE TIME ACTIVITIES

- a- This activity gives you a chance to organize and arrange things. It demands precision and neatness. It requires a sense of planning, order and forethought. _____ (42)
- b- This activity allows you to do as you please regardless of rules or conventions. It provides for adventure, change and independence, involving a minimum of rules. _____ (43)
- c- This activity provides for the enjoyment of aesthetic feelings and of sensuous impressions. It may involve the enjoyment of one or more of the arts, and indulging in sensory pleasures and feelings. _____ (44)
- d- This activity involves reflection, thinking, analyzing and asking questions. It involves seeking scientific and philosophic truth and an understanding of life. _____ (45)
- e- This activity enables you to tackle a difficult task and to achieve high standards. It offers recognition for your accomplishments. It involves determination and the will to succeed. _____ (46)
- f- This activity involves forming and furthering sexual relationships. It involves the enjoyment of feelings of love. It provides the opportunity for attracting others and flirting. _____ (47)
- g- This activity gives you a chance to be with others and meet new people. It provides the opportunity for cooperation with others and engaging with them in common activities. _____ (48)
- h- This activity gives you an opportunity to help others who are in need and to protect and support them. It may involve being with children or taking care of animals. _____ (49)
- i- This activity gives you a chance to be "on the go." It relieves the feeling of listlessness and provides for action. It keeps your mind off things because it requires your full attention. _____ (50)

(15) Below are sixteen 7-point scales each referring to a word pair. Use these scales to describe what leisure means to you.

The scale points indicate the following:

- 1 = extremely
- 2 = quite
- 3 = slightly
- 4 = neutral or unrelated
- 5 = slightly
- 6 = quite
- 7 = extremely

Put a check mark at that point on the scale which best describes what leisure means to you.

For example, if the word pair is Beautiful 1 ✓ 3 4 5 6 7 ugly and you feel that leisure is quite beautiful, you would check 2 on the scale; on the other hand, if you feel that leisure is extremely ugly, you would have checked 7 on the scale.
